

Where To Live If The 2012 Prophecies Are True? Completely Within Yourself And In Harmony With The Un

It is hard to go on the Internet and not see something about the end of the world in 2012. As the end of the Mayan calendar is just three years from now, this is hardly surprising. It begs the question, where to live if the 2012 prophecies are true? Is there any one place that is better than another if the end is coming?

by JeanHantch

It is hard to go on the Internet and not see something about the end of the world in 2012. As the end of the Mayan calendar is just three years from now, this is hardly surprising. It begs the question, where to live if the 2012 prophecies are true? Is there any one place that is better than another if the end is coming?

The first thing to be clear on is that the predictions do not mean the literal end of the world in a cataclysmic bang. It is not so much an ending at all, rather, it is a time of transition. It is about change which, of course, involves both endings and new beginnings.

According to the Mayans, what changes is not the universe itself but our consciousness within it. This time period in which we are living right now is an opportunity for us to change our path from one which is self-destructive to one which is more open to being one with the universe and everything within it.

If we are not able to make this change within ourselves and our civilization, then the transition to the next age will be heralded in with a host of natural catastrophes. The belief is that only through spiritual development can we make this transition from a culture based on fear to one that is more harmonious. How we enter into this transition will dictate whether we disappear as a race or enter into the most positive stage in our development.

December 21, 2012 marks the end of the fifth Mayan world and the beginning of the sixth. The Mayans did not give predictions for this sixth world because our fate is unwritten. It is up to us to determine what faces us in the sixth world, a type of nirvana on Earth or the end of our civilization.

Where you live at this time is not really important, it is how you are living that is the key. Preparing for this transition is not about moving yourself physically, it is about transforming yourself spiritually. We can only discover our potentials both as individuals and as a people by working towards enlightenment of the spirit.

That being said, living close to or within a spiritual community is probably the best choice that you can make. This will make it that much easier for you to be focused on your spiritual development. And, in doing so with others, the energetic vibration rises exponentially. There are several places in the world of people who believe in the 2012 prophecies and are preparing themselves for the new age.

There are also certain areas in the world where the energetic vibration of the earth is at a higher level. Even if you do not realize this is what you are feeling, you naturally feel more centered and at peace in places like these. Examples of strong energetic centers include Nepal and the areas surrounding Cuzco in Peru.

So, where to live if the 2012 prophecies are true? It is not a physical location that you need to find. It is that space within yourself where you are in total spiritual harmony with yourself and all within the universe. What we should learn from the 2012 prophecies is that only through personal spiritual development can we be not only saved but ushered into the new sixth world in a better place and form than ever before.

About the Author:

For more about this subject Click Here!